Fire rips through Rykers Ridge home

By David Campbell

Madison Township Firefighter Cody Macon sprays water to knock down hot spots in the interior of a home that caught fire in the 2000 block East Valley View Trail near Madison on Tuesday.

Source of blaze still under investigation

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

Fire ripped through a home near Rykers Ridge on Tuesday morning, causing heavy damage to the kitchen and attic in the 2000 block of East Valleyview Trail near Madison.

According to Madison Township Fire Chief Robert Black, firefighters were quick to arrive at the scene because some Madison Township and Ryker's Ridge fire department personnel were already at the RRFD just 3 miles away when the call came in at about 9:30 a.m.

However, by the time they arrived they found the kitchen area fully engulfed but were able to vent the roof and get the fire under control fairly quickly.

Firefighters from both departments responded and Black also gave credit to sheriff's deputies and EMTs who responded to the scene for helping assemble and lay hoses so that firefighters could get water on the fire more quickly.

Zoning appeals OKs halfway house, White Barn application

BY MARK CAMPBELL

Madison's Board of Zoning Appeals on Monday approved several renewals — including a one-year conditional use permit for the White Barn Venue, LLC — and a new conditional use permit for a women's halfway house to be located in the downtown historic district.

Kimberly Taylor, president and treasurer of the Jefferson County Transitional Services, spoke on that group's application via Zoom teleconferencing to convert a former commercial building located at 309 St. Michael's Avenue into a residential facility for women transitioning from state corrections into the community.

The facility would house up to 10 women and a night manager and have office space for an office manager during the day, providing living arrangements for women who have been released from prison but are still undergoing outside counseling and a probationary period while re-entering the workforce before mainstreaming back into society.

The facility essentially will do for women, said Taylor, what the Scalo House does for men. Scalo House has served a similar number of men in the 100 block of Presbyterian Avenue since 2008 with residential services and counseling while finding the men jobs to return to the workforce. The group has also operated Ruth Haven, another transitional facility for women recovering from alcohol and/or substance abuse, since 2011.

Taylor said neighbors of the group's two existing homes see no outward appearance indicating those properties are transitional facilities and the facility on St. Michael's Avenue will be operated in the same fashion. She said residents will come and go to work and off-site counseling and support groups, but otherwise live a quiet life as they work and prepare to re-enter society. They must either hold jobs or be doing community service work or both to stay in the program.

County up to 16 cases; curve may begin to flatten soon

BY COLLIN OVERTON

Jefferson County confirmed four new cases of coronavirus since Friday, but the community's infection curve looks to have leveled off and residents have done a good job at preventing further spread, county officials said at a briefing Tuesday morning.

The county now has 16 confirmed cases out of 267 residents tested as COVID-19 continues to surge in urban population centers like Marion County, which reported 50 new cases Monday and now stands at 3,063 cases — the most in Indiana. Statewide totals as of 5:25 p.m. Tuesday showed 8,527 positive cases and 387 deaths out of 46,017 tested.

Jefferson County Health Officer Dr. John Hossler did not have a lot of new information at Tuesday's briefing, but said Monday was the lowest number of new cases he has observed since March 29. However, he said it is it's still unclear if cases have peaked.

In case you don't remember from the previous article, Anthony Ray is originally from Alpine, Texas, a beautiful valley town in the far west of the state, closer to El

FIRE

No one was home at the time of the blaze. Homeowners Jonathan Benefiel and KatieJo Stackhouse had just purchased the property and were in the process of moving in. They said electricity was scheduled to be turned on at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday and the fire was reported roughly an hour later.

Benefiel said the house had undergone a recent inspection and no problems were detected so the source of the fire is still unknown.

"Everything was fine other than some cosmetic issues. There were some exposed outlets but nothing else," Benefiel said. "The one thing that they said that we should do is add more blown-in insulation. Thank God that we didn't do that or it might have been worse."

Black said blown-in insulation already in use made getting to the source of the fire difficult in the attic area. As a result, firefighters dropped all ceiling tiles in the house to make certain no hot spots were left that could later rekindle and further damage the home.

The home owners had moved in only a few boxes of belongings and were planning on bringing in their bigger items starting Tuesday. As a result, their losses of personal property were minor.

"I'm just glad that we weren't home and that the previous owners weren't there," Stackhouse said. "That's a good thing."

Black would not speculate on the cause of the fire at this time but the blaze is still under investigation.

ZONING

Residents are not allowed to drink alcohol, use drugs or even consume energy drinks and violators are expelled from the program. Many of them work in local factories and begin saving money that allows them to make a better start once they complete the program and fully released in about four to six months. Residents are not locked in at night but there is 24-hour supervision with surveillance cameras in rooms other than the bathrooms to monitor conduct and compliance with rules as well as drug testing.

Unlike some facilities that offer assisted drug recovery programs where residents are given medication like Methadone to help them break drug habits, Taylor said residents of the new facility must be drug free without medical assistance.

There is currently a waiting list for the existing facilities and that is why the group is converting the building at the corner of St. Michael and East First Street to serve more clients. Taylor said the building will retain its outward appearance but be remodeled inside to provide more rooms for housing and offices.

Zoning board member Nancy Burkhardt said she has personal experience with Jefferson County Transitional Services as a neighbor of the other facilities. She said the home in her neighborhood is quiet, residents cause no problems and the operation is unidentifiable as a halfway house from all appearances. She said the facility appears to have had no negative impact on property values because properties in the area are still selling well.

Citing that the facility fell under conditional use requirements as rooming or boarding house, the Zoning Appeals Board approved the conditional use permit for one year at which time the group must reapply for an extension.

In other business, the board approved a one-year extension of a conditional use permit allowing a renovated barn at 501 Thomas Hill Road to be used as a venue for weddings and other invitation-only events.

The application, filed by White Barn Venue, LLC and owners Bryan and Lela Michele "Shelly" Dews, has been met by some resistance at previous board meetings as well as in court concerning traffic congestion, lights, noise and appropriateness of conditional use, once again garnered several letters of record Monday. The Dews' attorney, Joshua Hershberger of Madison, noted the disputes over the venue have been adjudicated in Jefferson Circuit Court and the Court of Appeals with no findings that rules have been violated by the owners and in their operation of the facility.

He said with that legal principle in mind, the business has done nothing to support rejection of its renewal application.

"As long as the White Barn is still operating a rustic event venue focused on weddings, there has been no change," Hershberger said, noting the board has "no substantial evidence" supporting otherwise based on court findings.

"Frankly, the Dews shouldn't have to hire me every time they come back in front of this board," Hershberger said. "If nothing has changed it should be rubber stamped."

The board ultimately agreed and approved the application. Chairman Scott Baldwin recused from the discussion and vote on the advice of board attorney Devon Sharpe.

MUSICIAN

Paso than any big Texas city. As fortune and fate would have it he ended up in Vevay, Indiana, and we are all much the richer for it.

Wright's style is right out of the vintage Country & Western genre. Think Johnny Cash, Buck Owens, Hank Williams and all the rest, back before it became just Country, no Western. He's a bit twangy, his songs tend to be in three-four waltz time, and the themes are classic pathos.

"I actually was channeling the whole '60s vibe with this new EP," Anthony Ray said. "I was in Crawdaddy Music in Madison a while back and he had an old Fender Newporter acoustic guitar for sale. It's the guitar Johnny and lots of others used back in those days.

"I bought it and started playing around with it, and these new songs just kind of came out. It's like the guitar itself was inspiring the songs, becoming part of the process. If you know the song 'Understand Your Man' by Johnny Cash, that's the style.

"Another thing I did was to use 1960s ribbon microphones for these songs," he said. "Ribbon mics were invented in the 1920s, so when you listen to all the old recordings, that's what you are hearing. They stopped using them in the 1970s, but I dug some out for this project because I wanted that authentic sound.

"I brought in Jerry Girton to add some percussion, and I got Jeff Jackson to do lead guitar. We basically recorded and used the very first take, without a lot of overdubbing or massaging. I wanted that clean, honest first impression to come through.

"On Thursday I have a phone interview with a deejay named J.R. Smith at KLAP Big Bend Radio in Alpine, Texas, my old home town," Wright said. "He's going to debut the songs on the EP and hopefully create some buzz there among my old friends and fans.

"I'd encourage everybody to take a listen for themselves. We put a lot of thought and energy into this effort, and we're very proud of it.

The name of the EP is "Tomorrow's Luck" by Anthony Ray Wright. You can hear the songs by going on YouTube and searching the words "Anthony Tomorrows Luck."

CASES

"I still would not let our guard down. That doesn't imply that we can jump right back to normal, and how quick we return to normal is still to be determined," Hossler said.

The health department worked over the weekend tracing down contacts of those who recently tested positive for the virus to help prevent any further spread, Hossler said. He said county briefings might be reduced to once weekly rather than two depending on the demand for updates and information for residents as growth of the pandemic slows.

Health officials were uncertain on how many of Jefferson County's current cases have recovered, if any, but Hossler said he had found a positive case every time he's worked at the isolation clinic and only one patient has had to be admitted to the hospital, with the rest recovering at home.

"There are several people that I'm sure are recovering at home still that have tested positive and there are probably some of those who tested negative that actually did contract the disease and have recovered," said Shane Williams, director of EMS and emergency preparedness director for King's Daughter's Health.

In his own report, Williams said the isolation clinic at KDH has tested 267 people and treated 48 on Monday, its busiest day so far. The clinic is currently open Monday through Friday, but weekend hours could be added if there is demand, he said.

Williams also said the hospital received additional test kits Friday that would help the clinic continue testing an average of 25 to 30 people daily. Meanwhile, KDH continues to prepare for a potential surge and is moving forward with plans on what to do once social distancing restrictions are eased, he said.

Although Williams was unsure when that would happen, he said easements would probably have to be introduced in stages as it could be difficult to predict how or when COVID-19 dies down.

KDH is also partnering with the Mayo Clinic on testing and is now able to process results within 24-48 hours, he said. That partnership began Friday and yielded the three new positive cases = before Monday morning.

County health department administrator Tammy Monroe thanked residents for their response and cooperation over the past few weeks but reminding them to continue washing and sanitizing their hands frequently and wearing a mask when they have to be out in public for essential work or errands.

Although the health department stopped performing other nursing services when the COVID-19 outbreak began, Monroe said they decided this week to continue childhood immunizations on Thursdays by appointment only. Those wanting to get their child immunized for other diseases should call 812-273-1942, she said.

On the governmental front, Commissioners Robert Little and David Bramer said the county was still distributing cards for its wellness program and asked county employees to be vigilant in checking for red cards while out in the community. Anyone seeing a red card in a doorway or window should contact 911 or the sheriff's department, Little said.

Madison Mayor Bob Courtney reiterated his gratitude for residents of Madison and the county who have been social distancing "much more strictly, it seems like, in the past week."

After a light week with only one executive order from the governor, Courtney said he expected new directions related to Indiana's stay at home order by the end of the week.

He also gave an update on the city's Community Outreach Program, which has distributed close to 5,000 wellness cards to the elderly, immune-compromised and residents who are unable to leave their house for other reasons. The program has a hotline available Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at 812-274-0777, he said.

The city also continues to work with area businesses on deferring loan payments on its revolving loan program and making sure no one loses water or sewer services during the shutdown.

Courtney said he hoped to provide details on a "small business rescue program" by next week. He said that and other help is needed, as 2,000 Madisonians applied for unemployment benefits in the last three weeks of March and some of the city's largest employers have furloughed all employees until May.

With COVID relief packages leading to some confusion among the business community, the city hopes to host U.S. Senator Mike Braun at its next council meeting on April 21 to answer questions and provide clarification. Braun was already part of a conference call Tuesday with area business owners and the Madison Area Chamber of Commerce, Courtney said.

Madison Police Chief John Wallace warned residents to continue watching for scam callers trying to take advantage of the situation and urged them not to provide any information. The police department is still picking up and delivering prescriptions for residents as part of the Community Outreach Program and those interested can get help by calling 812-274-077.

Sheriff Dave Thomas also reminded residents to be wary of spam calls and said deputies were continuing their own welfare checks as part of the county's community program. Those inquiring about window cards should email the sheriff's office at grace.storm@jeffersoncounty.in.gov or call Thomas at 812-274-3968, he said.

The next briefing will be streamed on the Jefferson County EMA Facebook page at 10 a.m. on Friday.

Southwestern teacher awarded $1,000 gift

BY ELIZABETH MOORE

Sue Siekman, who teaches health at Southwestern schools, was recently awarded a $1,000 gift card as part of the TCC Verizon Authorized Retailer seventh annual Teachers Rock Supply Giveaway.

Twenty teachers were selected across the United States and awarded $1,000 to further support their biggest needs in the classroom. Siekman, who was notified of the award toward the end of February, said she used most of the money to help pay for new curriculum materials but saved some for future classroom expenses.

"When I was first notified, I thought it was a company trying to get me to buy something, so I contacted them and they told me that I had actually won the $1,000," Siekman said.

Siekman said the majority of the classroom materials she bought were from an online store since the schools have recently gone from using books to using more online information due to COVID-19 emergency closing classrooms. While she focused more online, Siekman did say she was very excited to receive this gift as it allowed her to purchase some items that she had wanted for some time but never had the money to spend.

Ditch the victim mentality

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: Good for Also Slender 50 Years Later. How nice that she has retired in Florida and has access to a pool. She is among those whose financial well-being allows them to swim a mile daily and maintain their appearance in ways that many others cannot.

This reminds me of the celebrities who give birth to twins and 90 days later are back in their size 2 jeans, tummy tucks intact, with personal trainers and chefs.

The working class cannot afford such perks, but the narcissistic Also Slender wants to ensure that we celebrate her success. Applause, everyone. — Never Was Slender, Still Working

Dear Never Was Slender, Still Working: Your letter is made up of excuses and deflection. This might seem like tough love, but there are plenty of working-class people who are in great shape, and there are plenty of financially successful people who are in terrible shape.

It is not fair to take away Also Slender's victory and chalk it up to wealth. People can choose every day whether or not to move their body and exercise. And every day, people can choose what foods they will eat to nourish their body.

Please stop seeing yourself as a victim of circumstances and instead see yourself as the beautiful person you are. The more you do that, the better you will feel about yourself and the less you will need to put down those who have found success.

Dear Annie: My experience 25 years ago with my wife, the mother of our two young sons, was similar to Betrayed by Soulmate's. She changed from being the best mother two little boys could ever wish for to the worst mother they could be cursed with.

No need to go into details here. About 10 years after her change, and the end of our family unit, I read an article by the National Alliance on Mental Illness explaining the behaviors of people with bipolar disorder. I had never heard of this illness. My wife had 12 of the 15 behaviors.

Fast-forward another 12 years and she took her life.

Bipolar disorder has the highest rate of successful suicide of the many mental illnesses.

It took me years to realize that I needed to educate myself about mental illness. Most of us don't know or realize how many people in our lives are impacted by a mental illness.

Thank you for your educational column, and for helping us realize we all have shared experiences. — Anonymous

Dear Anonymous: Your story is sad but enlightening. Raising awareness of mental illness is very important. I am so sorry that you lost your wife and that she was taken by this disease. I hope your letter alerts those who find themselves in a similar situation and are suffering.

Be safe; get tested

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: In a future column, please stress that when someone is cheating (or being cheated on), they should be tested, along with everyone else involved — and the sooner the better. — JP

Dear JP: Great advice. I hope this isn't a lesson that you had to learn the hard way. Being cheated on is bad enough.

Readers can visit gettested.cdc.gov to find nearby facilities that will conduct testing free of charge.

Dear Annie: I was surprised and disappointed at your response to "Outside the Bubble." The writer of the question appears to me to be looking for reasons for excusing his/her attitude toward the Catholic Church, into which he/she was raised, by finding fault with siblings who take their faith seriously.

What is wrong with religion becoming an all-important part of one's daily life? I believe that is what our faith is supposed to be. Catholics have an obligation to attend Mass on Sunday and on certain Holy Days, among other obligations. This might make it necessary, if one is traveling, to find a nearby Catholic Church to attend. This may be inconvenient, but I do not see that as "compulsive behavior."

If these siblings are intolerant of people of other faiths, that is not an attitude consistent with Church teachings, as certainly our Pope Francis has made clear. But as for our Church a "filling a void" in our lives or giving us "a spiritual high," isn't that what our faith is supposed to do? Especially, in the times we currently live in, with all our health uncertainties, we need more than ever for our faith to fill those voids.

If the writer feels that relatives are intolerant of her attitudes, she could try to find it in her heart to realize that her siblings may be acting out of love and concern for her. Perhaps she should find it in her heart to be a more loving and tolerant person herself. — Person of Faith

Dear Person of Faith: There are two sides to every story, and yours sheds some light on the flip side of "Outside the Bubble's" situation. Faith is indeed an essential part of life for many of us, and I'd never intentionally discount that. I appreciate your writing.

Former Southwestern coach Bomholt headed back to Jay County

BY COURIER STAFF

Jerry Bomholt has returned to where it all started by accepting the boys basketball head coaching job at Jay County.

Bomholt, who spent the past six seasons at Southwestern, began his head coaching career at Jay County in 1980, going 57-39 in four seasons with three-straight sectional titles and two appearances in the regional final.

"I want to finish my career in a place I'm comfortable," Bomholt told the Commercial-Review in Portland. "I had a great time and I was just a stubborn old mule … I should have stayed.

"Wife and I always talked, when the opportunity came we would try to go back and this was just the right time."

Bomholt got his first taste of head coaching when he took over Anderson Highland during the 1979-80 season on an interim basis after head coach Bob Fuller collapsed during halftime of a game and died. Bomholt led Highland to a 23-1 record that season but was not offered the full-time job.

He then got his first full-time gig at Jay County and stayed at the school for four seasons before moving on. After that he had stops at Northwestern, Shenandoah, Columbia City and Princeton before getting hired at Southwestern in 1997.

Bomholt took the Rebels to the Class 2A State Championship game in his first year and went 78-35 in five seasons before moving across the county to Shawe Memorial. He coached the Hilltoppers for nine seasons, going 135-73 with four sectional titles and two regional runner-up finishes.

David Campbell

Jerry Bomholt, shown coaching at Southwestern earlier this year, has been named the head boys basketball coach at Jay County. Bomholt previously coached at Jay County from 1980-84.

After a two-year stint at Franklin where he went 31-14, Bomholt returned to Southwestern to take over a Rebel program that had won just one game the year before. Within five seasons, Southwestern was ranked No. 1 in the state.

Southwestern went 82-60 during Bomholt's second stretch and won two-straight sectional titles in 2018 and 2019, the program's first since that state runner-up finish in 1998. But he resigned late in the season after a clash of personalities with his players.

Jay County athletic director Steve Boozier told the Commercial-Review that the school was not concerned with how Bomholt's tenure ended at Southwestern.

"We did our due diligence," Boozier said. "After we heard the whole story from coach Bomholt and from their AD (Tom Scroggins), along with several letters of support from people in that community — including players in the program — we felt good.

"He felt it was time for him to make a move and we took it as our gain."

Bomholt's 549 career wins rank ninth among active coaches and 23rd in the state's history. He has won 13 sectional titles.

His contract at Jay County is for three years.

"He stood above the others. He's coming to us with 549 wins. He has instant credibility and the ability to build a program," Boozier said. "He had a connection to Jay County, yet it's not a connection in a sense that he doesn't really have anybody he knows in the program but he knows what Jay County is about. I think he has a very good idea of what we can do moving forward."

Jay County was 7-16 a year ago — its first losing season since 2001. Bomholt is ready to get started.

"I put a blue shirt on and told my wife it's the most comfortable blue shirt I've had on in a long time," he said.
